ArticlesDeoxynivalenol. Deoxynivalenol (DON) is the most potent natural mammalian teratogen known. It induces a distinctive syndrome in mice and rats consisting of hypoplasia of the thymus and spleen, followed by perinatal death. The pathogenesis of these congenital effects is unknown. It has been suggested that DON inhibits protein synthesis and hence disrupts cell proliferation. This chapter will review the chemical, biochemical, and toxicological properties of DON, and recent results on the effects of this mycotoxin in animals. Data on the contribution of DON to the global crop disease and its role as a mycotoxin in animal feeds will also be presented. Month: August 2018 We have the right to know the truth. After all, the truth shall set us free. But what does that mean? Is it just that we should know the truth about life and death? Or is it something more, something bigger, something profound? The reality is, truth is something we rarely, if ever, really ...
